Nevada Guard backs first responders for 22nd year at 'America's Party'

Story by: Spc. Adrienne Lopez
17th Sustainment Brigade Public Affairs

LAS VEGAS, Nev. – The Nevada National Guard completed its 22nd year assisting first responders in Las Vegas for “America’s Party” — an annual New Year’s Eve celebration that regularly brings more than 300,000 partygoers to the Entertainment Capital of the World.

About 220 Guardsmen and women assisted for the activation this year. More than 100 of those were on the Las Vegas Strip to assist with crowd control and ensure a safe celebration. Additionally, about 40 members of the Nevada Air Guard backed staffs at University Medical Center and Sunrise Hospital and Medical Center on Friday and into the early hours of Saturday morning for potential triage support in the case of any emergency. This support has been requested the past four years following the Route 91 mass shooting in Las Vegas that killed 60 country music concertgoers in 2017.

“The Nevada National Guard has been so busy the past two years with the pandemic, overseas deployments, firefighting and so much more,” Nevada Gov. Steve Sisolak told a group of Guardsmen and women at the Speedway Armory in Las Vegas this week. “This mission in support of local law enforcement is crucial to ensure we are prepared for anything that happens on The Strip during ‘America’s Party.’ I can’t thank you all enough for stepping up and supporting the Las Vegas Metropolitan Police Department and Clark County Emergency Management during this year’s celebration.”

“Many of our Guardsmen work full-time as law enforcement officers,” said Maj. Gen Ondra Berry, Nevada’s adjutant general, who served as the assistant police chief in the Reno Police Department during his 25-year career in law enforcement while also serving as a member of the Nevada Air Guard. “We work hand-in-hand with members of law enforcement for myriad training exercises and real-world scenarios. It’s not unusual to see them working together.”

Various forms of the cooperative New Year’s Eve mission and training exercises have occurred since the Y2K scare of 1999.

Metro Sgt. Timothy Frederick, who works in the event planning unit, thanked the Guardsmen and women.

“On behalf of Metro, thank you for your help,” said Frederick, who is also a major and traditional Guardsman in the Nevada Army National Guard. “We couldn’t do it without you.” are prepared for anything that happens on The Strip during ‘America’s Party.’ I can’t thank you all enough for stepping up and supporting the Las Vegas Metropolitan Police Department and Clark County Emergency Management during this year’s celebration.”

Santa Claus arrives in Reno aboard C-130

Story by: Airman First Class Thomas Cox,
152nd Airlift Wing Public Affairs

NEVADA AIR NATIONAL GUARD BASE, RENO, Nev. – Santa Claus was greeted by over 200 Nevada Air and Army National Guardsmen and family members at the Nevada Air National Guard base after he flew into Reno from the North Pole, Dec. 18, 2021.

An aircrew from the 192nd Airlift Squadron flew a C-130 Hercules aircraft up north and picked up the holly jolly man and two of his elves, allowing Mr. Claus's nine reindeer to rest before their big night next week.

Mr. Claus arrived and was greeted in true celebrity fashion, waving out of the top of the aircraft as it taxied onto base, as many of the children waived back excitedly.

After disembarking from the aircraft, he was greeted by the guardsmen and their families who were eagerly awaiting his out on the flight line. He went down the line and wished all in attendance a happy holiday before taking the festivities into the Fuel Cell Hangar on base.

Inside, there were bounce houses, an abundance of treats and candy canes, a letter to Santa station and even an opportunity to take a photo with Santa himself. Toys were also available for the children attending the event as well, all donated generously by the Reno chapter of Toys for Tots. The children were able to fill up a bag of these early Christmas gifts to be able to take home.

It is safe to say there was no shortage of holiday cheer on the base as there was laughter and smiles everywhere from adults and children alike.

The annual event is put on with the help of the Nevada National Guard Family Programs, Key Spouses, the local Blue Star Mothers chapter, the 152nd Force Support Squadron and many more volunteers.

High Rollers host first Honorary Commander meeting

Story by: Senior Airman Michelle Brooks,
152nd Airlift Wing Public Affairs

NEVADA AIR NATIONAL GUARD BASE, Reno, Nev. -- The 152nd Airlift Wing hosted the first annual meeting with honorary commanders at the Nevada Air National Guard base here December 4, 2021.

The Honorary Commander Program is an Air Force-wide initiative which strives to develop, promote, and provide key community leaders greater exposure to the 152nd Airlift Wing and to the roles Airmen play in supporting our nation's defense and community.

"The Honorary Commander Program is a great opportunity to build key relationships with civic leaders," said Col. Jeremy Ford, 152nd Airlift Wing commander, "These relationships strengthen our community and have positive impacts for both the community and our Airmen."

Honorary commanders Dr. Shamik Sengupta, with University of Nevada, Reno; Jana Elliot, with Renown Regional Medical Center; Britton Griffith, with Reno Engineering Corporation, and Dan Morgan, with InterConnect, served a holiday meal to Airmen at the base dining facility prior to attending the strategic meeting with wing and state leadership.

During the meeting, honorary commanders learned about the wing history and the Airmen they serve. Honorary Commanders reflected on their experiences in their role and discussed strategies with leadership on increasing community awareness and understanding of the 152nd mission.

2nd Lt. Jesse Lemos, 152nd Communications Flight Director of Operations, discussed the relationship the communications flight has built with their honorary commander, Dr. Shamik Sangupta, Executive Director of the University of Nevada, Reno (UNR) Cybersecurity Center. The 152nd Communications Flight has been working with UNR students to mutually expand and develop cybersecurity skills.

"Due to this relationship, our Airmen are able to polish their skills with UNR students," said Lemos. "We've gone beyond just a relationship and are actually getting mutual help from one another. We are able to lean forward and use this help to increase our readiness."

The Nevada Air National Guard currently has six honorary commanders, each serving a respective unit. Honorary commanders serve for a period up to three years and are nominated by members of the Nevada Air National Guard.

"I was very honored to be selected because I feel like it is a small way I can serve the members of the Air National Guard," said Jana Elliot, 152nd Medical Group honorary commander. "I look forward to working together to build a partnership to increase community support and awareness."

Col. David Clark receives Order of Nevada award, named after father

Story by: Airman First Class Thomas Cox,
152nd Airlift Wing Public Affairs

NEVADA AIR NATIONAL GUARD BASE, RENO, Nev. – In 2001, The Nevada National Guard Drennan A. Clark Order of Nevada award was created and was named in honor of Maj. Gen. Drennan Clark (ret.), one of the longest serving Nevada Adjutant Generals. Now, 20 years later, his son, Col. David Clark, has been awarded the special accommodation.

Clark currently serves as the Special Projects Officer for the Nevada National Guard State Headquarters. He is what is known as a traditional guardsman, serving with an obligation of only training one weekend a month and two weeks of active training a year, truly a “citizen-soldier.”

He is also known as Mr. Clark to the students at Sparks Middle School in Sparks, Nevada. This is where he has spent over 25 years teaching social studies to thousands of students.

“I always say that education is a calling in life, it’s a noble profession. I also say the military is a calling in life, it’s a noble profession,” said Maj. Gen. Ondra Berry, Nevada Adjutant General. “Here you have somebody that can do both of those callings. I just want to thank you for what you have done to give those young people hope.”

Col. Clark started his military career in 1992, over 29 years ago, and has only served with the Nevada Air National Guard.

He started off working in numerous officer and command positions throughout the 152nd Maintenance Group (MXG), even working up to become the commander of the group in 2016.

His efforts with the 152nd MXG directly supported over 3,400 sorties and 3,600 wartime mission hours for the aerospace expeditionary force, all while maintaining a 90% effectiveness rating.

Aside from his time with the maintenance group, Clark also served as the Vice Commander of the 152nd Airlift Wing in 2013. In this position, he assisted in implementing the commander’s inspection program, a critical component of the Air Force inspection program.

Due to his efforts, the wing was fully compliant on all items well ahead of schedule, enabling commanders to find and fix any issues prior to the inspection.

He also assisted in improving both the wing’s medical readiness compliance directly leading to an increase in the physical fitness pass rate from 89% to 96% in just two years’ time.

Clark has also completed three tours of duty to Iraq in support of Operation Iraqi Freedom, as well as deployments to U.S. Southern Command and U.S. Air Forces in Europe. Along with being activated several times for state emergencies.

In 2017, Clark moved to the Nevada State Headquarters where he has been since. Here he was a part of the group that took on standing up the Nevada Air Guard’s first ever innovation team.

Clark was also a large part in creating and leading the state’s efforts focused on improving resiliency of the Airmen.

“When we talk about resiliency, that is such a large part of your legacy,” said Berry to Clark during the ceremony. “The video that you filmed during the wing’s resiliency down day opened the doors for so many to feel comfortable and be able to reach out for help.”

“Thank you for all that you have done for this organization. If there is anyone that is very well deserving of the Drennan Clark award is Dave Clark.”

Clark and his father then took to the stage where the orders of the award were read off, highlighting all of Clark’s achievements in his career thus far to those in attendance, which included his family and many key figures from throughout his career.

His father then placed the medal around his neck and they rendered each other a salute, an expression of respect and honor.

“Standing up here today, I am standing on the shoulders of giants,” said Col. Clark.

Many of those giants were sitting in the seats just a few feet in front of him. Nevada Adjutant Generals including his father, Maj. Gen. (ret.) Drennan Clark, as well as Maj. Gen. (ret.) Giles Vanderhoof and Brig. Gen. (ret.) Larry Cerfoglio were in attendance. Also there was Col. (ret.) Steve Hansen, one of Clark’s biggest mentors, along with senior leadership from both the Nevada National Guard State Headquarters and the 152nd Airlift Wing.

“It was my dad, Generals Vanderhoof and Cerfoglio and Col. Hansen that kept the mission going when our unit lost the F-4 phantom fighters,” said Clark. “They got us into our new mission and pushed the future of the wing forward.”

“I didn’t know how important this was until about three years ago when I started working for General Berry. The future is standing on his shoulders, Col. Chauvin’s shoulders and Col. Gunderson’s shoulders as they travel back to Washington D.C. to try and secure the mission of the future.”

“It’s not about them and it’s not about me, it’s about the young Airmen in the unit,” said Clark. “What we want is a relevant and secure mission for the Nevada Air National Guard well into the 21st Century.”

“Also I’m sure my sisters would agree with me, but our dad has had us on his shoulders our entire lives,” continued Clark. “He was an attorney, he was in the National Guard, he was raising a family of five children, and he always found time to coach our sports teams.”

“He always found time to be there for us.”

Maj. Gen. (ret.) Drennan Clark had joined the Nevada Air National Guard in 1960, after growing up and living his entire life in Reno, only moving away to attend the University of San Francisco.

General Clark started his career off as a photo lab technician with the 152nd Reconnaissance Group and later earned his commission in 1964 when he became a supply officer for the 152nd Supply Squadron.

In the beginning of 1968, he had been called to active duty during the Pueblo Crisis where he served as the commander of the 6314th Supply Squadron operating out of Suwon Air Base, Korea and later as the chief at the Special Operations Branch of the 6314th out of Osan Air Base, Korea. He returned to Nevada in the June of 1969 following his release from active duty.

Not too long after, General Clark was assigned to the Nevada Air National Guard Headquarters as the staff judge advocate where later in 1983, he was officially appointed as the state judge advocate.

Clark became the state’s assistant adjutant general for air in 1984 after many years of serving as a judge advocate, even serving three years on the Air National Guard’s Judge Advocate Policy Council. In 1987, he was appointed as the Nevada Adjutant General, a position that he served in until 1991. Clark was one of the longest serving adjutant generals in the state’s history.

The last position that he served in with the Guard was the chairman of the National Guard Bureau’s Executive Environmental Quality Board. He later retired on January 21, 2001.

Maj. Gen. (ret.) Clark served meritoriously in the Nevada Air National Guard for over 40 years and was the first receipt of the Drennan A. Clark Order of Nevada award. According to Col. Clark, his father was surprised with the award at a luncheon during a senior leadership conference in California by Generals Vanderhoof and Cerfoglio.

“When this award first came out, I said ‘I want to get that,’” said Col. Clark. “I knew I was 17 years away, but I wanted to get that award and I wanted my dad to put it over my head and give it to me.”

Governor, Adjutant General wish Deployed High Rollers a Happy Holiday

Story by: Airman First Class Thomas Cox,
152nd Airlift Wing Public Affairs

RENO, Nev. – Governor of Nevada, Steve Sisolak and Adjutant General, Maj. Gen. Ondra Berry held a video conference with deployed members of the Nevada Air National Guard, December 21, 2021. The Nevada Director of Staff-Air, Col. Brian Gunderson also briefly joined in the conversation. The deployed guardsmen consisting of aircrew, maintenance and logistics Airmen from Nevada are currently providing aerial delivery and theater airlift throughout the U.S. Africa Command Area of Responsibility. For many of whom, this marks their first deployment overseas away from family.

The call was to wish those serving overseas a safe and happy holiday and to offer thanks for all the sacrifices that the Airmen are making this holiday season.

The leadership team and other full-time members of the 152nd Airlift Wing also wished those deployed a happy holiday last Friday in a pre-recorded message.

“I want to start off by thanking you officially for your service to our country and to our state,” said Sisolak. “Your sacrifice, your dedication does not go unnoticed, there’s 3.2 million people that call Nevada home that are very appreciative of what you’ve done and what you continue to do.”

Sisolak, as the governor of Nevada, serves as the commander-in-chief of the state’s National Guardsmen when they are in a Title-32 status of the U.S. Code. When they are deployed overseas, in a Title-10 status, their official commander-in-chief is then transitioned to the President of the United States.

“Being the commander-in-chief of the Nevada National Guard is the honor of my lifetime,” said Sisolak towards the end of the call. “It is a distinct pleasure and honor to be able to get to know some of you and to work with you.”

“Remember most of all that we are so so so proud of you for what you do for the state, what you do for our country and what you do for the world,” added Berry. “You cannot have a great America, a great democracy without a great military, so never forget that.”

Airmen were also given the opportunity to personally tell Maj. Gen. Berry and Governor Sisolak how they have been doing since departing home earlier this month, as well as the chance to ask any questions that they may have for the higher leadership.

Those who spoke included: Senior Airman Victoria Boldi, a 152nd Aircraft Maintenance Squadron crew chief, Airman First Class Jada Wansley, a member of the command support staff for the 152nd Operations Group, Staff Sgt. William Durns, a 152nd Maintenance Squadron avionics specialist, along with Capt. Dylan Weber, the newest C-130 Hercules pilot from the 192nd Airlift Squadron on the deployment.

All the Airmen appeared in high spirits and highly motivated, as also described by Lt. Col. Patrick McKelvey, 192nd Airlift Squadron C-130 Hercules Pilot and 75th Expeditionary Airlift Squadron Director of Operations.

“The demand is high, the diversity is diverse and everyone is doing a great job as we’re all getting in our groove,” said McKelvey. In describing the operations environment, McKelvey said that Airmen are working alongside, Soldiers, Sailors and Marines and Nevada always stands out.

“The leadership is definitely happy to see our planes out here, there hasn’t been a mission that we have turned down since being arriving in theater.”

“I think by the time we leave here, we will have left a great impression representing the state of Nevada.”

“I tell the whole nation all the time, when you want to see a best practice, you look at the state of Nevada and it’s military and how they get it done time and time again,” added Berry at the end of the call. “Always ready, always there, thank you everyone that is there and have a happy holiday.”

152nd Mission Support Group holds 3 change of command ceremonies in one weekend

Story by: Airman First Class Angela Crawford,
152nd Airlift Wing Public Affairs

NEVADA AIR NATIONAL GUARD BASE, RENO, Nev. - The 152nd Mission Support Group (MSG) saw the passing of the guidon with several command changes, December 4, 2021.

Col. Kyle Cerfoglio, 152nd MSG commander, was a busy man that afternoon, as he was the presiding official for three back-to-back change of command ceremonies for the Logistics Readiness Squadron, Civil Engineer Squadron and the Communications Flight.

The first ceremony kicked off after lunch with the Civil Engineer Squadron (CES) assumption of command in the Wing Auditorium. Maj. Alexander Rodriguez assumed command of CES from Cerfoglio. Rodriguez was previously a C-130 Hercules pilot assigned to the 192nd Airlift Squadron. While still a pilot, he now oversees the many missions executed by the men and women of CES.

“Communication is really important as a commander and Major Rodriguez is excellent at it,” said Cerfoglio. “He is good about asking the tough questions and listening, which is something I personally appreciate and I know everyone in CES will appreciate it too.”

The second ceremony was the change of command for the Logistics Readiness Squadron (LRS) where Lt. Col. Shaun Cruze took command of the squadron from Lt. Col. Jenelle Kimsey. Kimsey will be moving on to a new position as the Human Resource Officer at the Nevada Joint Force State Headquarters in Carson City, Nev.

While Kimsey was in command of the squadron she was a key part in managing over 300 Airmen that were activated for the COVID-19 pandemic response, the state’s lengthiest and largest activation in history.

“Kimsey made leadership look easy,” said Cerfoglio. “She did an amazing job in LRS and we will miss her.”

Leaving the comptroller flight, Cruze will oversee the day-to-day operations of the logistics readiness squadron.

The final change of command ceremony of the day was for the 152nd Communications Flight. Maj. Gregory Green relinquished command to Lt. Col. Shannon Castaneda. Green led the communications flight for the last five years.

Following the ceremony, Green retired from the military after many years of meritorious service, while surrounded by family and loved ones.

Castaneda is bringing many years of experience and expertise to the flight from her time in active duty, reserves, and now Air National Guard. She has served in many capacities which has afforded her a wealth of knowledge that will propel the organization in the future.

With these changes in command, the men and women in the 152nd Mission Support Group will continue to execute the mission while exceeding all standards set upon them.

Mass Attacks & Terrorism

With recent mass attacks on the public in Tokyo, Afghanistan, Burkina Faso, Peru, and many other countries around the globe, it's evident that mass casualty terror attacks are still as common as ever.

BEFORE:

- See something, say something;
Watch out for people behaving strangely, suspicious packages, or people using strange communications or signals. Observe warning signs in individuals you know, such as an increase in anger or violent behaviors.
- Always have an exit plan;
Identify multiple exits, and the fastest way to them. Know what rooms are able to be locked in the event you have to hide.
- Know lifesaving skills;
Practice your first-aid skills, how to subdue an assailant (when applicable), and how to comfort individuals in a traumatic situation.

DURING:

- Run, Hide, Fight;
Seek safety, and help those around you to get to safety also. When you're safe, call 911 and give them as much info as possible. If you have to hide, lock and block the doors & windows, turn off the lights, and keep quiet. Fight only as a last resort, but if you have to fight commit and be aggressive. Use whatever makeshift weapons you can find, and don't stop until the attacker is subdued.

AFTER:

- Help the Wounded;
Once you know the threat is over, take care of yourself first and then help provide immediate care. Ensure 911 has been called and is en-route.
- Comply with Law Enforcement;
When officers arrive on scene, remain calm and follow their exact instructions. Keep your hands visible and empty; they don't know who the threat is and if it's been mitigated.
- Communicate;
Let your family and friends know you're okay and safe, and to stay away from the danger area. Try not to cause speculation on social media, as it might confuse news outlets and investigators.
- Consider Professional Help;
These events are traumatic, and your mental health is just as important as your physical health. Talk about what happened, and be there for others who may have been affected as well.

CBRN: What are the consequences if the perpetrator of a mass casualty incident uses CBRN agents? On March 20th 1995, A doomsday cult known as Aum Shinrikyo released several packages of sarin nerve gas in the Tokyo subway system. It killed 12 people, and injured over 5,000. It required thousands of checkpoints across the nation, and dozens of raids on cult compounds to find and capture the assailants.

CELEBRATING DR. MARTIN LUTHER KING JR.

Article by: Master Sgt. Adam Willett,
152nd Equal Opportunity Office

RENO, Nev. -- Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. is widely regarded as America's preeminent advocate of nonviolence and a pivotal leader of the Civil Rights Movement.

In sermons and speeches, Dr. King's voice rang out with a call for us to work toward a better tomorrow. He challenged us all to live up to the ideals enshrined in our founding documents— that we are all created equal, endowed with unalienable rights to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

During his lifetime, King strived to realize the dream of communities united by inclusion.

Each year, on the third Monday in January, Americans across the country answer Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.'s call to action by serving their neighborhoods and volunteering their time to make a difference and spark change.

Dr. King once said, "Life's most persistent and urgent question is, 'What are you doing for others?'"

MLK Day of Service brings us one step closer to realizing King's dream.

As the Department of Defense remembers Dr. King on his birthday, let us recommit ourselves to the standards set, the legacy that lives on, and the challenges that remain.
