Browbeating and nagging doesn't work

By Ch. Maj. Donny Crandell
152nd Airlift Wing Chaplain

marriage minute

I have discovered that we influence change in others far more powerfully when they can see how our own changes have worked for us.

For example, I didn't think my wife was exercising enough to maintain her health, so for many years, I badgered her to accompany me on my daily walks. She refused and began to react negatively because I brought it up so often. Finally, I decided to quit bugging her about her exercise, but I kept on doing it myself. And guess what? You're right.

Now she's up to six miles a day (mostly at the mall). I couldn't change her, but my own change motivated her to change."

Dr. Gary Smalley, I Promise

Nevada Senate bill proposes funding National Guard at-risk youth program

By 2nd Lt. Emerson Marcus
152nd Airlift Wing Public Affairs

Jeanie Beck, now a senior master sergeant in the 152nd Mission Support Group, Nevada Air National Guard, repels during an exercise at Project ChalleNGE in 1998. Beck entered the Nevada Air Guard the following year in 1999. After the state lost funding for the program in 2009, a Nevada State Senator sponsored a bill for the upcoming legislative session starting Monday that would establish funding for a "Youth ChalleNGE" program in the state. (Courtesy photo)

Senior Master Sgt. Jeanie Beck knew there was no going back when she boarded "Con Air."

That was the nickname jokingly given to the 152nd Airlift Wing C-130 that transported Beck and other teenagers to Project ChalleNGE, a Nevada Guard-organized program for at-risk youth with a campus located outside Phoenix, Arizona.

"That was my last chance to run the other way," said Beck, who
